

762
674
671
582 1:Stanford U. S-4, 5 1956 AF15 East China
AF15

women met violent deaths as a result of marriage disputes in 39 hsien (out of a total of 86) in Hunan. 23

674 It seems reasonable to assume that the figures are incomplete and the categories not comparable because the Communists had no ~~more~~ accurate material to offer. If the incidence of violence in connection with marital and family disputes is truly reflected in these figures, their extension into yearly rates shows these deaths occurred at the rate of less than two per hundred-thousand population in the Northwest Region, less than four per hundred-thousand in the East China Region, and less than nine per hundred-thousand in Hunan. It should be remembered, however, that these ratios are based on incomplete figures and that the incidence of violence may have resulted as much from Communist pressures as from the authoritarian character of the traditional family.

586 Divorce and marriage figures released by the Communists are equally difficult to render meaningful because of gaps in statistics and the different time spans and categories which are given for the figures cited. For the nation as a whole, the number of divorces was reported to have risen from 186,000 in 1950 (the last seven months of it under the new

23. C.B., 236, p. 5.

CHILD PROTECTION

119

that the form of court disposition could be replaced, to the advantage of the young people, by a social process. Accordingly, with the consent of the Secretary-General of the Council, police ceased to send cases of victimised children to the court, except in those instances where an adult was involved, when the court concurrently ruled as to the disposition of the child. All other cases were handed over to the Child Protection Service for the most careful handling possible under the circumstances. 736 597 633 567

The Chinese court held that the natural parents of a child in every case have a right to the child, whether exploited or otherwise. Instances occurred where a judge handed back to the care of parents girls who had been sold. The court view is based upon the relevant portion of the Civil Code. There is room for a reconsideration either of the law or of its interpretation by the court.

For the majority of those who either had no immediate relatives or were being exploited by relatives other than their parents, placement in an institution frequently represented the only possible adjustment. Every effort was made at once to find relatives or friends of a young person coming into the hands of the Service. If time was allowed to elapse, the chances of finding that link which would perhaps save the child from being alone and adrift forever might be lost. By newspapers, and by using local Chinese methods of advertising near the place where a child had strayed, the vital link was frequently established.

IN 1940, FOR THE FIRST TIME, a complete picture was obtained of the extent of lawbreaking by young people under 18 years of age. In all, 981 appeared in court on criminal charges—899 boys, 82 girls. Of this number 70 per cent were unemployed; 87 per cent were involved in some form of thieving. Twenty-one per cent had previous convictions. 633 738 674

There was no special procedure in the First Special District Court governing the treatment of juvenile offenders. Regulations for a special procedure of the Ministry of Judicial Administration of the Chinese Government exist, but were not in use in Shanghai, or elsewhere in China, so far as is known.² In response to the 633 738 736

² In Instruction No. 2237, dated May 9, 1936, the Ministry of Judicial Administration of the Chinese Government instructed the courts to temper justice with mercy and understanding in dealing with juvenile delinquents. The articles of instruction [696]

582
671 purposes. If the figures can be given credence, they indicate a remarkable advance over the situation existing two years earlier. After an investigation of Marriage Law implementation in 1952, a woman minister of justice, Shih Liang, reported that in only three of the country's 2,086 counties were families reformed up to perfect Communist standards, and that in the East and Central-South regions freely contracted marriages and other reforms had gained no acceptance with the people. ²²

582
671
762
674 A further study of figures issued by Communist sources indicates that the regime did not have exact knowledge of the situation in many areas. To cite one example, an announcement of the results of the 1952 investigation of Marriage Law implementation include "incomplete statistics" on deaths attributed to the existence of problems and mistreatment connected with the "feudal family" system. According to these figures, 4,105 women were killed or driven to suicide in the East China Region between January and August 1952; and 356 women and 161 young men suffered the same fate in the Northwest Region during the first half of 1952. In lieu of figures for the Central-South Region, the report mentioned 606 young men and

22. China News Analysis, Hong Kong, No. 5, p. 3.